Commentary

Global real estate continued its muted start to the year, with the AUD hedged index returning -0.2%. NVIDIA and AI-related euphoria which boosted equities this month, mostly did not carry-over into the real estate sector.

Macroeconomic data releases and less-than-dovish Central banker commentary weighed as expectations of rate cuts were pushed out. In particular, US jobs, CPI and PPI data all came in higher than forecast this month. Market expectations on the amount of rate cuts in 2024 fell from 6 to 4 times and the timing of the first cut has been pushed back from March to June.

Near term sector returns seem to be driven by macroeconomic data and interest rate expectations. While common convention in listed real estate is to express and emphasise value relative to NAV. In this month's Investment Perspectives we look at whether price to NAV has been a good predictor of REIT returns.

February was the peak of reporting season, and when companies typically first provide guidance for 2024 earnings. In our opinion, such guidance seemed conservative with many appearing to have baked in a recession scenario into their forward earnings estimates.

A stand-out from reporting season was the strength of retail. Scentre Group in Australia and Simon Property Group in the US both reported strong results, with increased occupancy and excellent leasing metrics.

On the other hand, European storage REITs were weighed down. Safestore missed on earnings for 1Q and occupancy slipped slightly.

Some interesting real estate related news released during the month included:

- Data from RealPage Analytics show that US apartment occupancy was at a decade low of 94.1% as at the end of 2023. Occupancy was worst in sunbelt markets such as Austin and Charlotte where supply as a % of inventory has increased by over 25% in the past 5 years. On the flip side, coastal cities such as New York and San Francisco fared the best, with occupancy effectively in line with the city's 10-year average. Supply in these 2 cities grew only 2% and 4% respectively in the past 5 years.

- According to CBRE, since the end of lockdown in the UK, 75% of central London office deals >20,000sqft were 'growth' deals. i.e. new occupiers or existing occupiers moving to larger premises. In fact, of the 140 central London office occupiers (with space >20,000sqft) that have moved buildings in this period, 88 took on more space.
- A record high of 171.8million sqft of Industrial space was delivered in the US in 4Q23 according to a report from JLL. Only 34% of these deliveries were pre-leased. The previous record-high was set in the prior quarter, where almost 160m sqft was delivered. Amidst this backdrop of record new supply, vacancy in US Industrial increased by 230 basis points in the year, to end 2023 at 5.7%.
- S&P Corelogic Case-Shiller Index reveals that US house prices grew +5.5% in calendar year 2023.
